By:Distribution of the insecticide dimethoate in the goat's oviduct and embryo. A corn-soybean meal diet containing trace amounts of the insecticide dimethoate was given to six does before mating. Following mating, the weight of the does was carefully monitored and the effects of the insecticide on the does' gametes and developing embryos were determined. Mating took place on Days 4-15. Each did was killed after mating and the ovaries, oviducts, uterine fluids and embryos were removed.
Concentrations of the insecticide were estimated in each of these tissues at Days 5, 10 and 15 of gestation. The insecticide levels in the does' gametes and embryos were calculated and the embryo:tissue ratios determined. The insecticide was distributed differently in the different tissues. The majority of the insecticide was located in the uterine tissues. The oviduct and the gametes contained very little insecticide. Only a small amount of the insecticide was present in the embryo. With the exception of Day 5, the embryo:tissue ratios for the insecticide were lower than those of the other tissues.type="ref"}). However, such natural systems also tend to have relatively little N stored within vegetation, which may also result in nitrogen mineralisation at a higher
