Dynamic nuclear polarized liquid crystal liquid crystal. Dynamic nuclear polarized liquid crystals (DNLPLC) are liquid crystals that are polarized by nuclear magnetic resonance (NMR) spectroscopy, and are able to show droplet and tube morphologies. The behavior of the DNLPLC depends on the concentration of the nuclide (¹⁹Y) and the temperature of the sample. At high concentrations, the field induced by the nuclide ¹⁹Y in the molecular cyano-benzylidene cyano-1-methylpiperidinium (CNCCN-1-MPBZ) is large enough to induce a negative dielectric anisotropy and thus shift the balance between the parallel and perpendicular orientation of the LC director to the sample. However, at low concentrations, the field is small enough to remain parallel to the sample, which results in a homeotropic orientation.
