Photoshop CS6: The History In June 2013, Adobe announced Photoshop CS6, a major upgrade of Photoshop that took the program about 16 years to build and a decade to develop. Adobe claimed that the new version of Photoshop was faster, more stable, and more versatile than ever before. Photoshop CS6 also included 16 new features: - Adobe Touch of Magic, which automates most of the processes in Photoshop. The goal of this feature is to make Photoshop more accessible by simplifying common tasks, automating what was previously a time-consuming manual process. - Content-Aware Move: This feature analyzes a subject in a photo and automatically finds a part of the image that can be shifted to match that part of the subject, or an environment. By doing so, the software can remove unwanted elements from a photo, as well as provide compositional adjustments to balance the scene. - Content-Aware Fill: This feature analyzes your subject, and fills in any missing pixels within the subject boundary, or an existing edge in your subject. Adobe recommends that users use this feature for lost or missing parts of a photo that can be replicated from nearby pixels. - Content-Aware Sharpen: This feature analyzes your subject and sharpens the edge of the subject in the image. It also evaluates the entire picture and applies sharpening and details to the entire image. - Content-Aware Sepia Tone: This feature analyzes an image, evaluates the area, and applies the Sepia Tone effect to the image. Sepia Tone gives images a vintage appearance. - Content-Aware Remove Red Eye: This feature analyzes your subject for red eye and automatically removes the defect from the photo. - Content-Aware Move Kit: This feature allows users to pick a specific part of an image and move that part to a new image. - Content-Aware Auto-Enhance: This feature analyzes your image and adjusts the overall brightness and contrast. The settings suggested by the software vary from image to image based on the subject matter and composition of the image. - Content-Aware Clone: This feature analyzes your subject, and then makes a copy of the subject using digital cloning technology. The results are apparent when you compare the original subject and the cloned version of the subject. - Content-Aware Red-Eye Fix: This feature analyzes your subject, eliminates the Extensor pollicis longus tenosynovitis in flexor synovitis: a rare cause of tenosynovitis. A case is reported of acute flexor tenosynovitis secondary to extensor pollicis longus (EPL) tenosynovitis. The tenosynovitis was caused by a concomitant flexor synovitis. Other causes of EPL tenosynovitis were excluded. The flexor synovitis resolved and EPL tenosynovitis was noted to have completely resolved. We believe this to be the first report of acute tenosynovitis of EPL in flexor synovitis. Fluorescence-based methods for evaluation of anti-cancer drug activity. This chapter describes a few fluorescence-based methods that are useful to evaluate the anti-cancer effects of drugs. These methods include evaluation of cell cycle by DNA staining and flow cytometry, measurement of cell viability by DNA/RNA staining and cell counting, examination of apoptotic cells by Annexin V/PI staining, and real-time monitoring of cell survival using single-cell microfluidic device. [Therapeutic effects of l-carnitine on folate-induced male infertility in mice]. To study the therapeutic effects of l-carnitine on folate-induced male infertility in mice. A model of folate-induced male infertility in mice was constructed and was treated with l-carnitine for 3 weeks. The serum concentration of l-carnitine and the level of acetyl-CoA in testis were determined, the oxidative DNA damage in the testis was assessed by comet assay, and the sperm quality was evaluated. After treatment, the serum concentration of l-carnitine increased by 85% and the level of acetyl-CoA was elevated to approximately 140% of the control value in the treatment group. The comet assay showed that the DNA damage was alleviated. The percentages of abnormally shaped sperms decreased significantly from (76 +/- 5)% to (52 +/- 7)% and (42 +/- 7)% (P Q: Why is there a need for a collection of shapes when HTML5 canvas handles everything we need? Internet based interventions for smoking cessation: are they really effective? Internet based interventions have been proposed as a means to overcome the poor coverage of the existing stop-smoking services in low- and middle-income countries. To assess the clinical and economic effectiveness of Internet based interventions compared to standard interventions for smoking cessation in low- and middle-income countries. A network meta-analysis was undertaken. We searched the Cochrane Central Register of Controlled Trials, the Cochrane Tobacco Addiction Group Specialized Register of Controlled Trials, MEDLINE, EMBASE, HEALTHSTAR, Health Management Information Consortium, Google Scholar and Drustat, the websites of the Cochrane Collaboration, the World Health Organization, and the Institute of Medical Careers and the Research Institute for Health Services and Policy. The UK Medical Research Council and Department of Health, UK Clinical Research Network, the Health Technology Assessment Programme, and research councils of all participating countries were contacted and reference lists were searched for additional studies. The last search was performed on 6 October 2014. Randomized controlled trials in which participants were randomly allocated to Internet or face-to-face cessation interventions. Two review authors independently extracted data and checked for risk of bias. We included 22 randomized controlled trials. In the network meta-analysis, among 9-20 week smokers, the percentage of abstinence in the Internet and face-to-face groups was similar: 16.7% and 15.3% respectively (95% CI: -1.6, 4.9). These numbers increased to 45.9% and 52.3% respectively (95% CI: 5.8, 8.8) at 20 weeks. Internet cessation offered a significantly greater number of 7-day point prevalence cigarettes than routine cessation care (24.1% versus 21.0% (OR = 1.12, 95% CI: 1.02, 1.24)). In trials testing the Internet as a delivery mode for quitline services, no significant difference was found between the use of self help materials and Internet interventions. Smoking cessation intervention delivered via the Internet is not more effective than standard cessation care among smokers of low to middle income countries. Internet interventions may increase the likelihood of quitting by 24% compared with routine care. However, these gains are offset by an increase in smoking relapse. Results of studies testing the Internet as an alternative to quitlines are inconclusive. The majority of trials were conducted among middle-income countries with the largest number in Mexico. None of the trials were conducted in low income countries.package io.
